

The *A collective exhibition by the artists of Beirut Printmaking Studio Unreliable Ledger

Vernissage

17.09.25

5pm to 9pm

Alaa Misto

Aya Nadera Zantout

Fadi Almelhem

Fanny Blikaz

Gosha Beshlyan

Leen Aoun

Mia Baraka

Mira Diab

Qamar Shamieh

Renozy

Sabine Delahaut

Salah Missi

Samer Bou Saleh

Shams Saffieddine

Tarek Mourad

Tayf Masri

Zahraa ElJundi

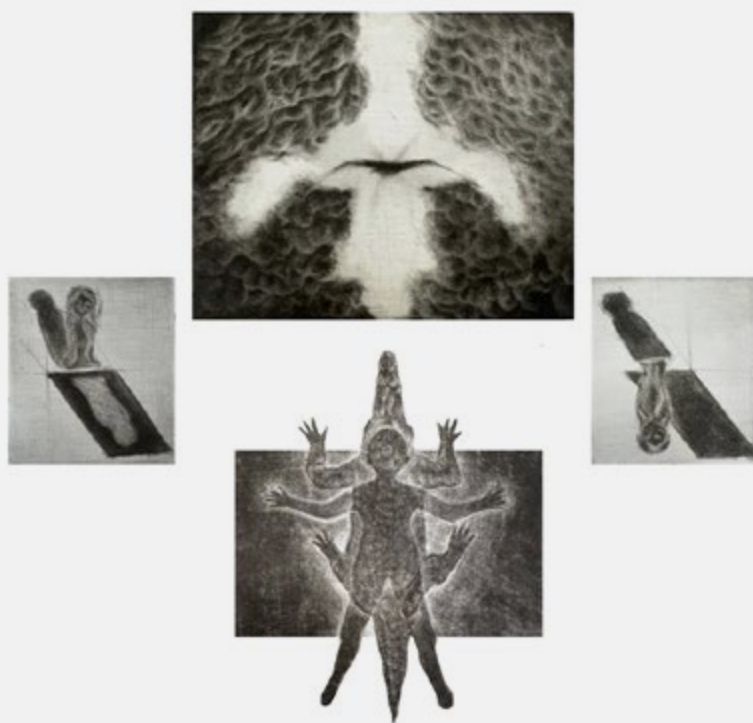

Beirut
Printmaking
Studio

17 — 27
09.2025

Alaa Misto

@alaamisto

Refuge, Rupture
70 x 50 cm

*Roulette on copper printed on cotton paper
edition of 4 + A.P.*

The form absorbs its own individuality, alone, away, orphaned.. Remembrance becomes the only way back, folding the self and the other into moments of stillness. To inhabit those moments, at once refuge and rupture, I return to two recalls: from childhood, lying above a metal plate I believed concealed a crocodile; and more recently, witnessing a bird impossibly high, suspended in the sky. One imagined as real, the other real as imagined, remnants of factual fantasy. This final state of remembrance is but a myth, both imprint and erasure, severed from its source yet continually inscribed.

Aya Nadera Zantout

@ayanzan

Physical memory is taken for granted. In a flash, it can disappear. The artist learned to archive from her grandmother, who was a hoarder of memory. Displaced from Yafa in 1948, her house targeted in 1982 in Beirut, the old lady kept a table of memories in the living room in that same house; a physical testament to the people she could not hold on to. Nearly one year ago, the table brutally disappeared in a target explosion at 1am, on October 1, 2024. By erasing the carved drawing, just as the table, the first print can no longer be.

Aya Nadera Zantout

@ayanzan

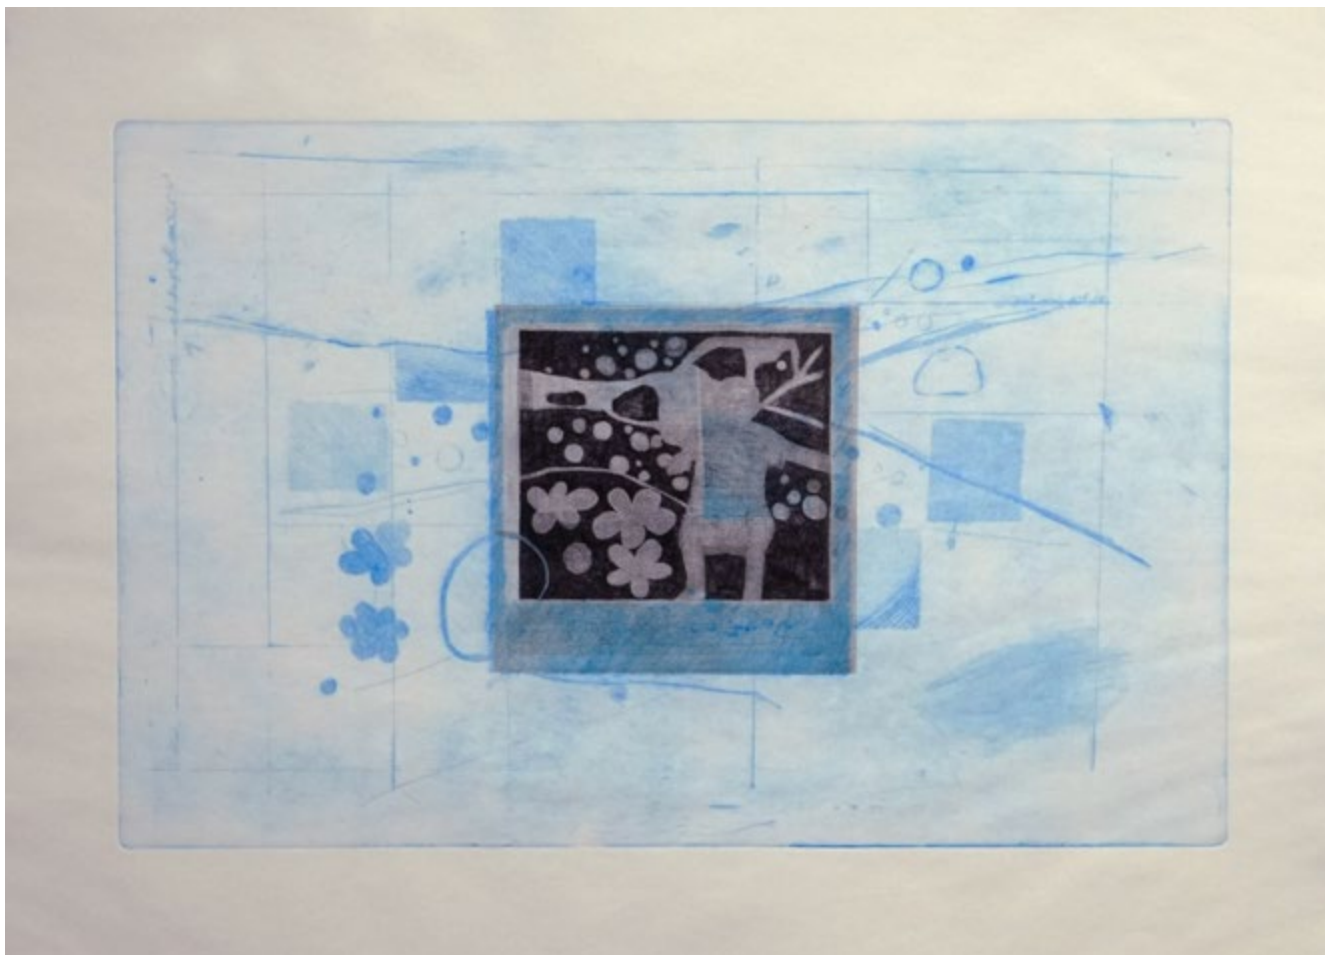

Blink - Diptych
25 x 25 cm

*Drypoint on copper printed on cotton paper.
Edition of 5 + A.P.*

Fadi Almelhem

@fadi.almelhem.artwork

Lasts I
66 x 48 cm

*2-color mezzotint on two copper plates printed on cotton paper.
Edition of 5 + A.P.*

On the reverse of a family photograph, I found the phrase: “A memory that lasts and lasts and lasts.” Yet fate stripped the image of its function. Permanence was not in the image, but in the legacy it carried: persistence of patriarchy across generations. Memory here is not a record of a past moment, but a pattern that thrives, regardless of place or fate. In this family, the eldest son bears the burden, the second son remains overlooked, and the daughters are denied recognition. Through the photographic archive I found in southern Syria, this permanence spoke for itself.

Fadi Almelhem

@fadi.almelhem.artwork

Lasts II

66 x 48 cm

2-color mezzotint on two copper plates printed on cotton paper.
Edition of 5 + A.P.

Lasts III

66 x 48 cm

2-color mezzotint on two copper plates printed on cotton paper.
Edition of 5 + A.P.

Lasts IV

66 x 48 cm

2-color mezzotint on two copper plates printed on cotton paper.
Edition of 5 + A.P.

Fanny Blikaz

@fannyblkz

I once promised a sun at dusk,
rising from beyond the seas to claim me.
Today,
tomorrow,
I shall speak to you of forgetting.
Forgetting,
yes, forgetting.
The days dragged on with cruelty;
I lamented a treacherous love,
draped myself in a garment of thorns.
A promise,
a betrayal,
a forgetting.
The days dragged on with cruelty...
A heart in love,
I delayed.
A heart ensnared,
I turned away.
The days dragged on with cruelty...
My body waned,
my strength undone.
Forgetting,
only forgetting.

Fanny Blikaz

@fannyblkz

Untitled I

29 x 39 cm

*Mezzotint and burin on copper printed on cotton paper.
Edition of 4 + A.P.*

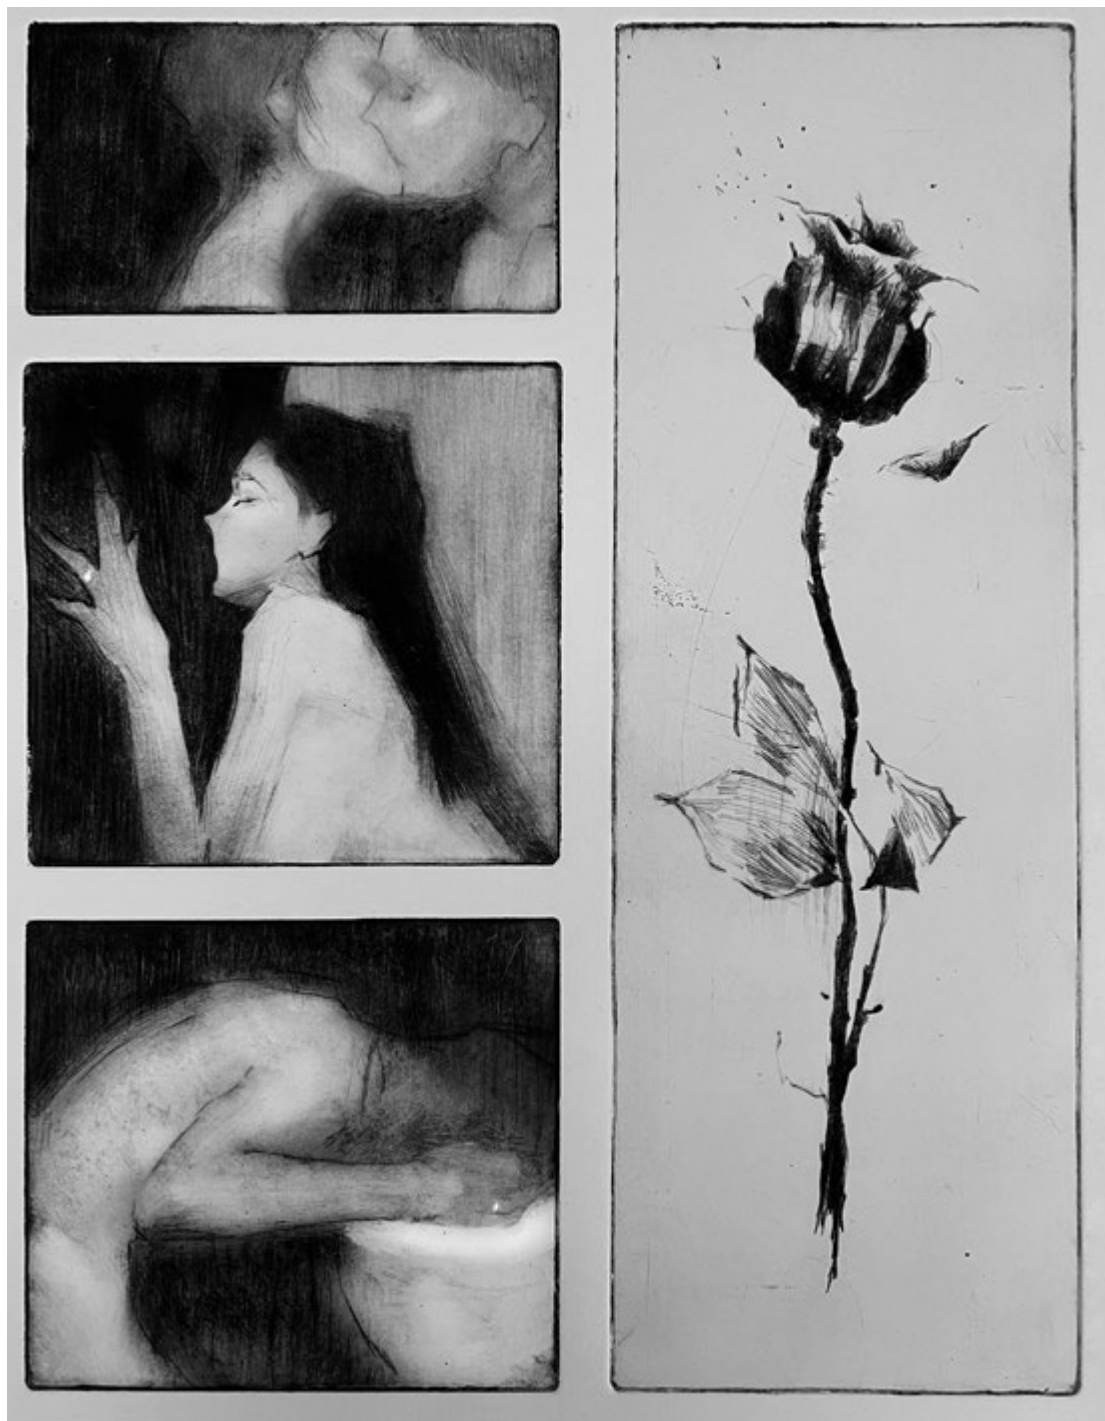

Untitled II

29 x 39 cm

*Mezzotint and burin on copper printed on cotton paper.
Edition of 4 + A.P.*

Gosha Beshlyan

@cocogosha

Safe word umami

40 x 58 cm

Drypoint on plexi printed on cotton paper.

Edition of 5 + 2 A.P.

The mind, doing what it must, often blurs the edges of reality, not to deceive, but to render experiences bearable, or sacred. What remains is an impression of the truth.

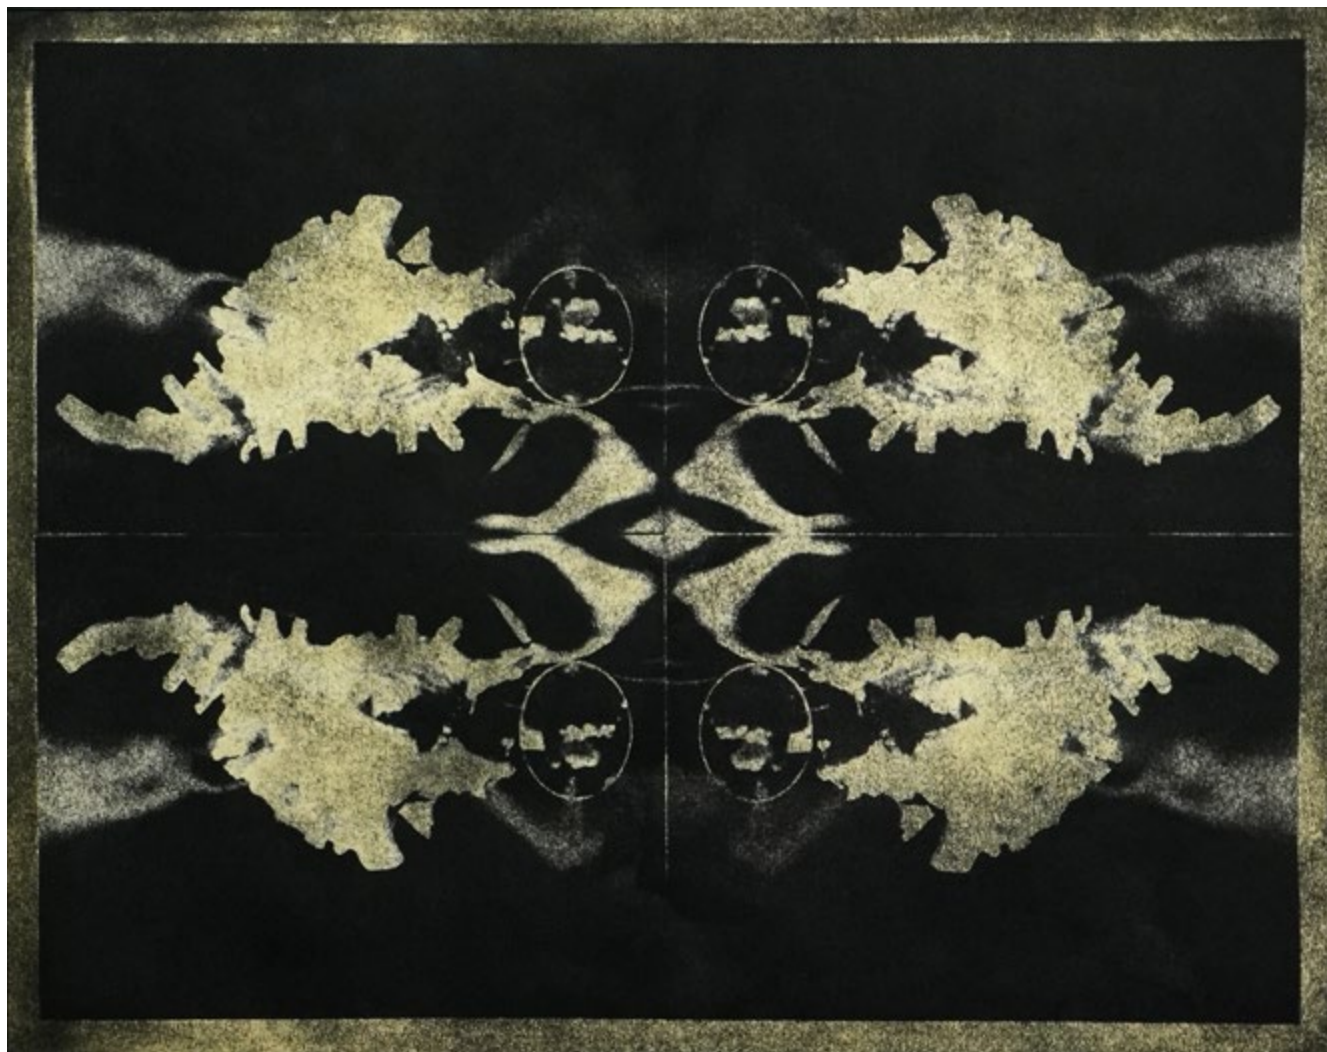

In this same approach to art, subjects are never rendered with precision, they are mere impressions in the midst of moments.

The Unreliable Ledger

A collective exhibition by the artists of Beirut Printmaking Studio

Leen Aoun

@leen.e.aoun

A Vessel
53 x 43 cm

*Gumoil print on cotton paper.
Edition of 2 U.P.*

Shifting each time we return to it, memory resonates to me like a shell. I use the shell as a starting object, a sensory vessel carrying sounds, an embryonic body cradling itself, that I have long collected and treasured. Through gum oil printing, the mirrored image transforms into an inkblot, reminiscent of a Rorschach, fragmenting perception and reflecting memory's fluidity. In this sense, the shell's body, once a source of shelter, refracts into a multilayered record of recollection.

The Unreliable Ledger

A collective exhibition by the artists of Beirut Printmaking Studio

Mia Baraka

@barakamia

barakamia.com

Dancing image (Beqaa valley, 5am, 2020)

65.5 x 40 cm

Four color screen print on cotton paper.

Edition of 25 U.P.

An early morning in the Beqaa Valley: smoke rising from a field, farmers burning grass. It looks like the burning tires on the street, from the year before, or the flames that swept through the nearby village.

Through screen printing, the image is broken into four colors: cyan, magenta, yellow, and black. Each layer is pressed in turn through the repeated labour of the body. As the layers accumulate, the image re-emerges, each pass disclosing a new fragment.

Mira Diab

@miradiab

We close our eyes to retrieve what is gone, and at other times to shield ourselves from what is too much to witness. The series reflects this duality: the gesture of closing one's eyes, evoked here through the transparent veil with all the ambiguity it carries. Is it a return to memory, or a shield against reality?

Each face is veiled in fabric. The veil is not erasure, but a surface that slows vision, introduces opacity, and asks the viewer to remain in the unease of not knowing.

Cloth is intimate, domestic, and mournful; it carries scent, remembers creases, and touches skin. It wraps the dead, gathers tears, covers a bride's face in ceremony, and lingers in drawers long after someone is gone. In these portraits, fabric becomes a soft archive, holding both personal and collective memory.

Hand-printed in the darkroom, the images emerge slowly, marked by time and uncertainty. Grief folds and interrupts, yet in those fractures it takes shape, like a photograph worn soft at the crease, holding what cannot be fully preserved.

Mira Diab

@miradiab

To Remember or to Forget - Plate I, Plate II, Plate III, Plate IV, Plate V, Plate VI

30 x 40 cm

Silver gelatin print from 6x6 negative on resin coated paper.

Edition of 5 + A.P.

The Unreliable Ledger

A collective exhibition by the artists of Beirut Printmaking Studio

Qamar Shamieh

@qamarshamieh

In Tension
40 x 30 cm

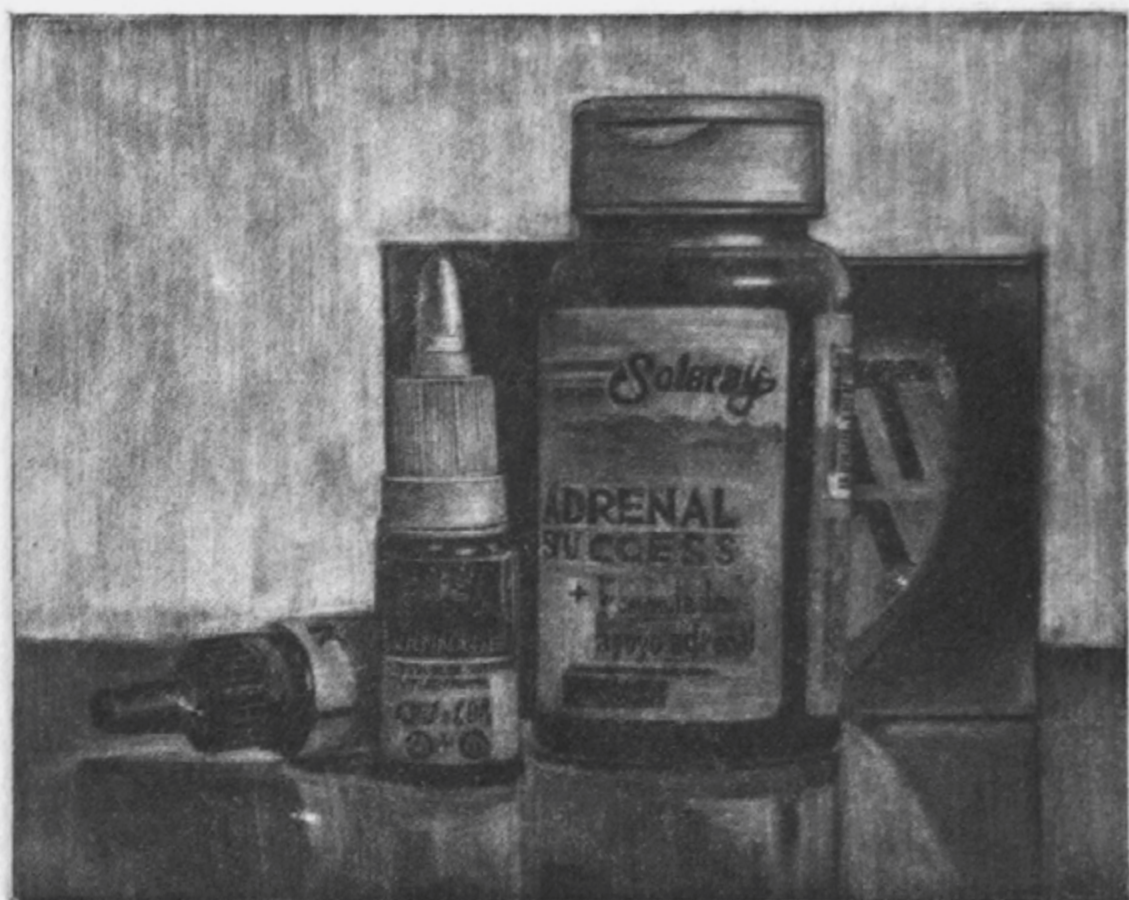

*Silver gelatin print from a 6x6 negative on resin coated paper.
Edition of 4 + A.P.*

Amidst the inhumane genocide that is ongoing for almost 2 years now, “In Tension” is an effort to commemorate the Palestinian people by focusing on 3 elements prominent in their history: the rock, a primitive weapon used to defend themselves against the most technologically sophisticated weapons, the key, an endless hope to go back and reclaim the land, and the kufiyah, a powerful symbol of cultural identity and political resistance. The key, barely holding on to the rock, is in a constant tension between giving in to gravity or resisting it.

RenoZ

@renozoner

renozstudio.com

Survival Kit

25 x 25 cm

*Mezzotint on copper printed on cotton paper.
Edition of 60 + A.P.*

“Survival Kit” is a still life, but not a quiet one. It gathers the medications I used to cope during the disturbing reality I have been witnessing. These medications, once a lifeline during the war, became part of my daily routine as I watched my world collapse from behind a screen, far from home.

After months of dissociation and numbing, I collected what remained of them, laid them out, and printed this work. A visual ritual of confrontation. A way to look at reality in the eye and tell it, simply, fuck you, I’m still here and I’ll be awake and watching.

The Unreliable Ledger

A collective exhibition by the artists of Beirut Printmaking Studio

Sabine Delahaut

@sabinedelahaut

sabinedelahaut.com

Save the Last Dance for Me
30 x 24 cm

Roulette on copper printed on cotton paper.
Edition of 20 + A.P.

Reinterpreting an image inevitably involves a certain degree of erasure and a modification of its original meaning, intentionally or not. Taken out of context, what does it tell us?

Foregrounding some of the protagonists who populate it and, in doing so, diminishing the presence of others alters its narrative. But isn't erasure precisely a way of making it more present?

The Unreliable Ledger

A collective exhibition by the artists of Beirut Printmaking Studio

Sabine Delahaut

@sabinedelahaut

sabinedelahaut.com

La Leyenda de Rita (Fantasmas de Guernica)
50 x 50 cm

*Burin & roulette on renalon and copper printed on cotton paper with watercolor.
Edition of 60 + A.P.*

With this work from the series “Fantasmas de Guernica,” I borrow a dramatic figure from Picasso’s masterpiece to interweave it, superimpose it on my composition, nourished by archives, testimonies of the tragedy lived by the inhabitants of Guernica, my grandmother’s stories about the Second World War but also by my “experience” as a witness to contemporary history. Like a puzzle, I interweave human and animal silhouettes, equally powerless spectators of wars and genocides. Through these hybridizations, I wish to inscribe these events in timelessness. Here, the roulette used like a pencil, then the chisel to engrave the plate, scarify it in a way. It is a need that echoes the ancestral one of leaving one’s mark, in stone, on steles... To engrave our memory and never forget.

Salah Missi

@salahmissi

Big Enough
35 x 50 cm

*Roulette on copper printed on cotton paper.
Edition of 16 + A.P.*

This work reflects the relentless cycle of explosions that echo across the region, with Lebanon at its core. These eruptions, both seen and unseen, mark the landscape with violence and instability, even when they go unnoticed by many. The piece conveys how such events, though distant at times, are vast enough to cast a shadow that inevitably reaches everyone. It reminds us that destruction is not confined to one place or moment—sooner or later, its impact will intrude upon each life.

The Unreliable Ledger

A collective exhibition by the artists of Beirut Printmaking Studio

Samer Bou Saleh

@samerbsaleh

bousalehstudio.com

Head I
50 x 40 cm

*Silver gelatin print from a 4x5 negative on fiberbase paper.
Edition of 5 + A.P.*

“The Rest” captures individuals in a simple yet profound gesture: laying their heads on a table, expressing a deep desire to disconnect and pause from the relentless pace of the world. This act of deliberate withdrawal becomes a way of choosing to forget—of setting aside, even momentarily, the weight of reality. When memories grow too heavy, we instinctively put them aside, choosing to forget. If memories are stored within our heads, then laying the head down becomes symbolic: an act of surrender, of letting go, blurring the fragile boundary between truth and denial, memory and erasure.

Samer Bou Saleh

@samerbsaleh

bousalehstudio.com

Head II
50 x 40 cm

*Silver gelatin print from a 4x5 negative on fiberbase paper.
Edition of 5 + A.P.*

Head III
50 x 40 cm

*Silver gelatin print from a 4x5 negative on fiberbase paper.
Edition of 5 + A.P.*

The Unreliable Ledger

A collective exhibition by the artists of Beirut Printmaking Studio

Shams Safieddine

@shams_safieddine_

Curfew
42 x 30 cm

*4-color mezzotint on copper plate printed on cotton paper.
Edition of 8 + A.P.*

“Curfew” reflects a personal memory from the 2006 Lebanese-Israeli war, when towns in the South lived under curfew and danger was hidden in the ordinary. As a child, I experienced this time with innocence, joy, and a playful mindset, unaware of the violence surrounding me. Looking back as an adult, I see the tension between preserving that purity and confronting the reality of danger. Through this work, I revisit childhood games that subliminally normalized violence, exposing how play became a shield for innocence while masking the larger game of war imposed on us.

Shams Safieddine

@shams_safieddine

Gift Aid
42 x 30 cm

*Roulette and drypoint on copper printed on cotton paper.
Edition of 3 + A.P.*

“Gift Aid” blurs the lines between reality and imagination, inviting viewers to reconsider play and adulthood. The work reflects on how violent toys shape children’s sense of reality while linking past wars to the present. Here, violence is not confronted directly—it is slowly gifted, offering the illusion of escape, and in that distance becomes quietly normalized, playing by the rules without questioning.

Tarek Mourad

@tarekmouradstudio

tarekmouradstudio.com

All Walks of Life - Plate I
40 x 50 cm

*Silver gelatin print from an 8 x10 negative on fiberbase paper.
Edition of 5 + A.P.*

This series, provisionally titled “All Walks of Life,” show the soles of three pairs of shoes, each tied to a different period in one person’s life. The soles of the shoes are presented as a witness of memories - some warm and unforgettable, others difficult and buried deep. One pair carries traces of moments they’d relive in a heartbeat while another bears the weight of regret, tied to decisions and experiences they’d rather forget. Together, the photos form a quiet, intimate archive of a complex, evolving inner world.

Tarek Mourad

@tarekmouradstudio

tarekmouradstudio.com

All Walks of Life - Plate II

40 x 50 cm

*Silver gelatin print from an 8 x10
negative on fiberbase paper.
Edition of 5 + A.P.*

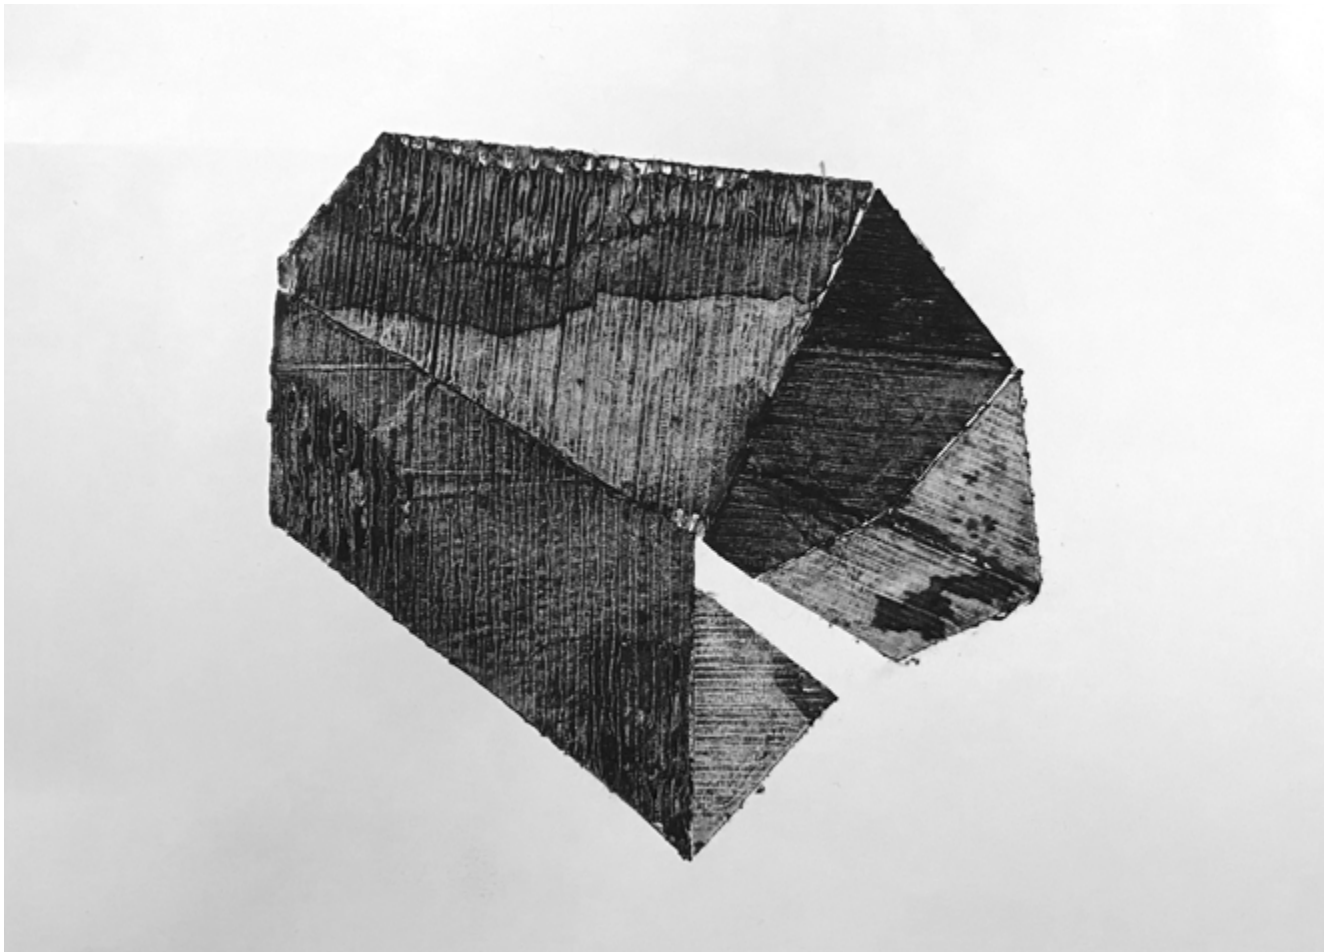

All Walks of Life - Plate III

40 x 50 cm

*Silver gelatin print from an 8 x10
negative on fiberbase paper.
Edition of 5 + A.P.*

Tayf Masri

@tayfmasri

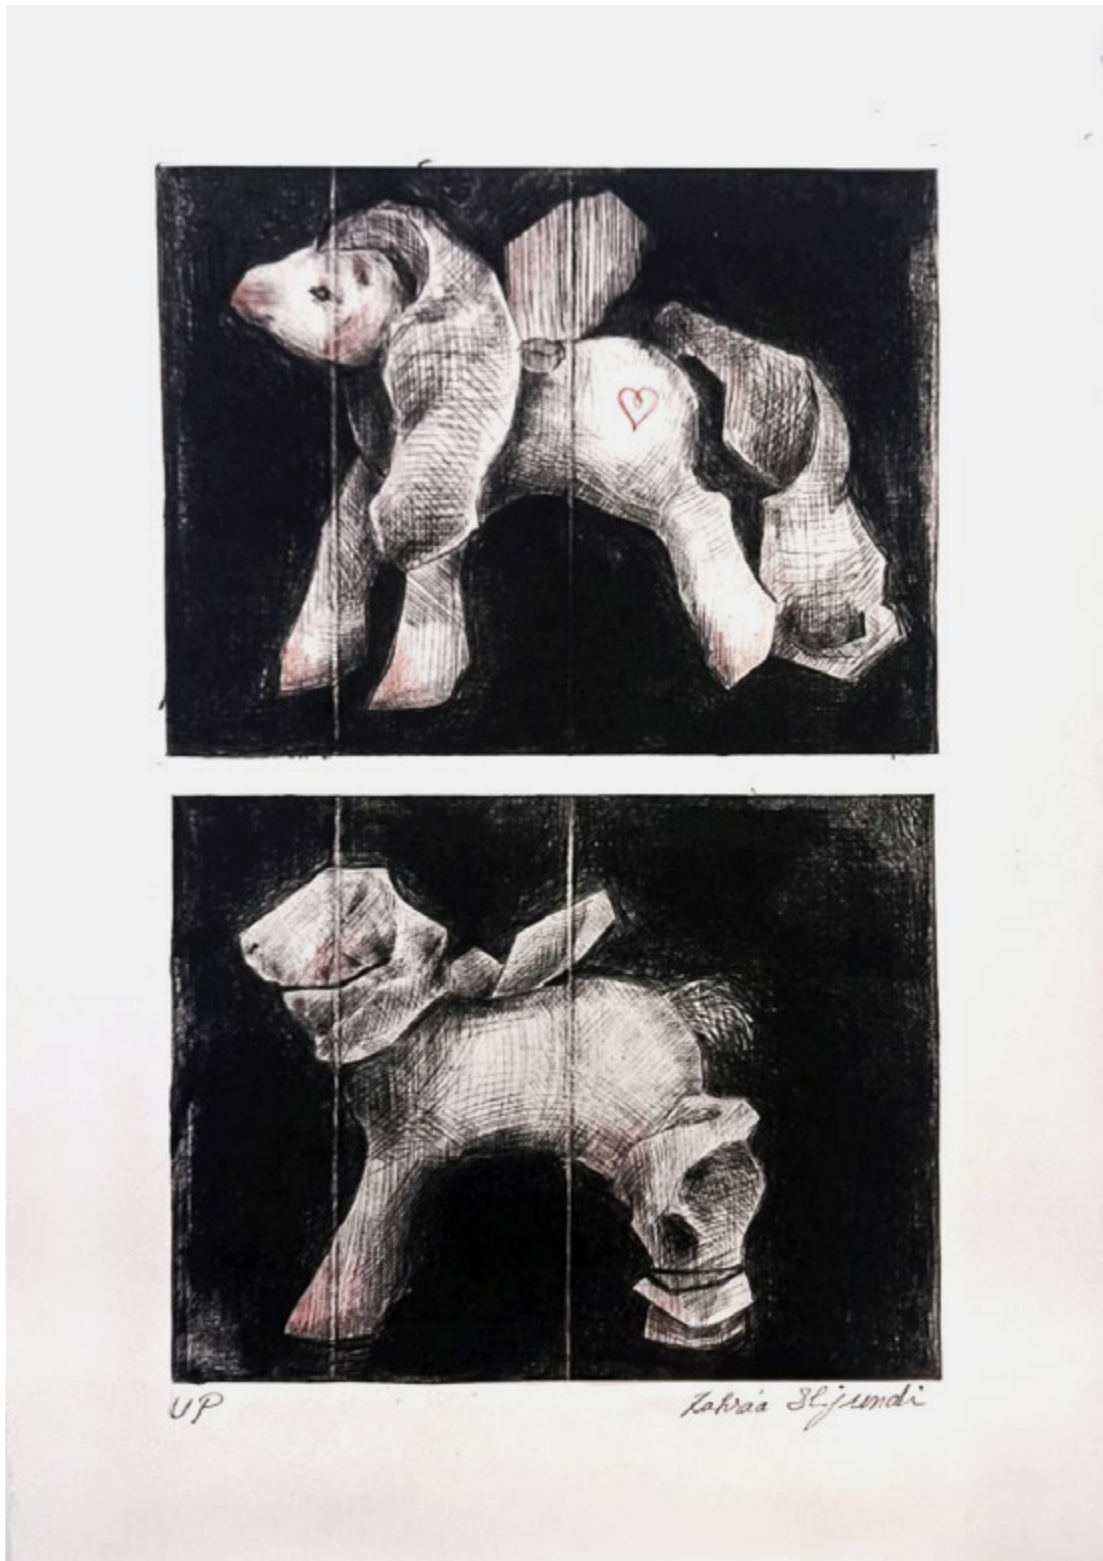

Untitled
38 x 25 cm

*Print from a cardboard plate on cotton paper.
Edition of 3 + A.P.*

Displacement is not merely a physical condition, but an internal rupture—a state of separation and loss, where chaos reigns both within and outside the individual. War, like fire, erupts suddenly and devours everything in its path, forcing people to flee, leaving behind fragments of a life abruptly torn apart. The randomness of the cardboard boxes—with their varying sizes, shapes, and markings—reflects this inner turmoil and embodies the fragmented psyche of those caught in the cycle of displacement.

Zahraa Aljundi

@zahraa.eljundi

Forget-me-not.
28 x 39 cm

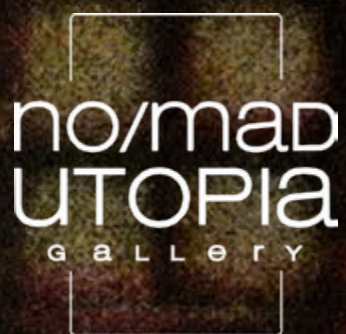

*Drypoint on tetrapack printed on cotton paper.
Unique print.*

The only as-certain thing as one's death is their past, which holds countless innocent, pure, and beautiful childhood memories. The difference between the two is that a human would never forget death, yet they often bury their memories upon growing up. In a parallel universe, those childhood memories would be asking you not to let them go—through the pony figure, “Forget-me-not”.

Beirut
Printmaking
Studio

beirutprintmakingstudio.com

nomadutopia.art